

Alicia Papanicolaou, RN, MSc, IBCLC

Alicia Papanicolaou is a Registered Nurse and International Board Certified Lactation Consultant with a Master of Science degree from Queen's University. Her clinical knowledge and practice is specialized to maternal child nursing. Since 2010, Alicia has served as a term adjunct at Queen's University, School of Nursing. Within the undergraduate program, she is involved with instructing numerous courses and interprofessional learning activities. As an educator, Alicia has found it rewarding to observe students bridge the gap between theory and nursing practice, as well as enhance their critical thinking.

As a lactation consultant, her Master of Science thesis focused on the use and exchange of donor human milk. Using a qualitative content analysis design, the research was guided by respect and curiosity regarding the participant's experiences with sharing human milk online utilizing a commerce-free approach.
